```
1 #include <stdio.h> //'stdio.h' contains declaration of 'printf()'
 2 #include <ctype.h> //'ctype.h' contains declaration of 'atoi()'
 3 #include <stdlib.h> // 'stdlib.h' contains declaration of 'exit()'
 5 int main(int argc, char *argv[], char *envp[])
 6 {
 7
        //variable declarations
        int i;
 8
 9
        int num;
10
        int sum = 0;
11
        //code
12
       if(argc == 1)
13
14
15
            printf("\n\n");
            printf("No Numbers Given For Addition !!! Exitting now ...\n\n"); 16
            printf("Usage : CommandLineArgumentsApplication <first number> <second</pre> 17
              number> ...\n\n");
18
            exit(0);
19
        }
20
        //  THIS PROGRAMS ADDS ALL COMMAND LINE ARGUMENTS GIVEN IN INTEGER FORM
21
         ONLY AND OUTPUTS THE SUM ***
        //  DUE TO USE OF atoi(), ALL COMMAND LINE ARGUMENTS OF TYPES OTHER THAN
22
                                                                                        P
          'int' ARE IGNORED ***
23
        printf("\n\n");
        printf("Sum Of All Integer Command Line Arguments Is : \n\n"); 24
25
        for (i = 1; i < argc; i++) //loop starts from i = 1 because, i = 0 will result ➤ in 'argv[i]' = 'argv[0]' which is the name of the program itself i.e :
          'CommandLineArgumentsApplication.exe' 26
        {
27
            num = atoi(argv[i]);
28
            sum = sum + num;
29
        }
30
31
        printf("Sum = %d\n\n", sum);
32
33
        return(0);
34 }
35
```